

Politics of Paddling: Turning the Tide on Extractivist Development

Dr. Jennifer Bagelman

Sessional Instructor, Department of Geography, University of Victoria energy development proposals in the pipeline here in British Columbia, and across North America.

-

I argue that forms of embodied politics, such as paddling, exceed traditional spaces of consultation and create possibilities for solidarities of trans-border resistance. This politics, I suggest, is part of a powerful anticolonial ecojustice movement led by First Nations challenging the very limited notion of citizenship upon which energy proposals have been conditionally approved.