COURSE DESCRIPTION

Food is a basic human need and right. The production, acquisition and consumption of food occupies everyone to some extent and connects each of us to many local and global issues. These include, but are not limited to, climate change, health, poverty and international trade. Most of us take food for granted because we have three meals a day with snacks in between. Many others on this planet, however, go without. As we look to the future, there are three major challenges that face the world. We need to match the increasing demand for food from a larger and more affluent population to its supply, do this in ways that are environmentally and socially sustainable, and ensure that the world's poorest people are no longer hungry.

This course provides an introduction to
