

Displacing Blackness: Planning, power, and race in twentieth-century Halifax

Ted Rutland

Associate Professor, Department of Geography, Planning, and Environment Concordia University

Urban planning has long been seen as a way of improving human life through spatial means. But what if planning's commitment to human life is the cause of, rather than solution to, the destruction that often